INTRODUCTION:
We can create a shared understanding, relate to one another and develop trust by finding across sectors to engage in social innovation. Government creates a culture of permission for public servants and government partners. Engagement in social innovation is crucial for working at scale. Recognition and support of government support and engagement.

Diversity drives innovation. This means we need to value difference, and find a way to create a culture of permission for public servants and government partners. Social innovation is just as important as engagement — by signalling its support, increased visibility and public awareness of social innovation.

Why is it important?
Social innovation ecosystems should be inclusive, collaborative, neutral, and root in shared values and aspirations. To run alongside shared narratives, so that what we do is clear both to each other and to the world. Supportive ecosystems help to develop solutions that match the scale of the problems we are trying to solve. Developing ecosystems allows us to connect the dots between ecosystems, solutions, and the systems that are created.

Creating ecosystems for social innovation is an essential task to deepen the impact of social innovations - in Turkey and around the world. Supportive ecosystems help to develop solutions that match the scale of the problems we are trying to solve. Developing ecosystems allows us to connect the dots between ecosystems, solutions, and the systems that are created.

For more information about the Wayfinder please see For more information, please visit www.sixwayfinder.com with lessons from Canada, Europe, Australia and the Middle East and North Africa.